The series of pictures of Our Lady by the Mexican artist Alejandro Range Hidalgo, which have appeared as covers of The Catholic Digest, will be resumed shortly. Meanwhile, those which have already appeared are available in four colors in full size, 15½" by 21", suitable for framing. The picture above is Our Lady of Sorrows.

Judging by the response so far, our judgment in discovery has been completely vindicated. The number of orders, running in thousands, demonstrates an eagerness everywhere to welcome things of beauty which, though as modern as today, are as old and as inspirational as anything in the high days of Christian art.

You may still get any one or all of the five paintings which have appeared by ordering on the convenient blank below.

• • the Open Door • •

MY NON-CATHOLIC husband was a war prisoner of the Germans in Italy during the 2nd World War. He and another soldier escaped, and hid in the hills around Rome.

An Italian priest took them to safety in his home at Castelgandolfo, summer residence of the Pope. There my grateful husband was so fired with enthusiasm over the Church that helped him and so many others that he wanted that faith for himself.

He asked for instructions, and two days before the American troops entered Rome, he was baptized and received First Communion. Proudly he bears the name given him in Baptism, Eugene, after the present Pope, Pius XII.

Mrs. John Payne.

THE WAR took me to Rome in 1944. I was indifferent to religion but keen on sightseeing. I found myself in a Vatican audience chamber, where an audience with the Pope was imminent.

I was hemmed in. But I had no wish to leave: the Pope would be an additional "sight." I was impressed by that gentle-looking figure, his air of benevolence. Was this the villain of the anti-Catholic stories I had been brought up on?

Other influences worked on me, slowly. Later, on being received into the Church, I recollected that my first step to Rome had been taken in Rome, where my antipathy to the Vicar of Christ had melted upon seeing him face to face.

F. Ellis.
